BOY SCOUTS

(Conducted by National Council of the Boy Scouts of America.)

A MESSAGE FROM FRANCE

"To the Boy Scouts of America from the Boy Scouts of France:

"A scout is a man whose mind is open to new ideas, and who goes on his way unafraid; he is also a knight with the firm conviction to aid other people at all times, and to do his best to make the world more happy."

"France of the Old World is the home of the knight; America of the New World, the home of the pioneer. What a magnificent ideal we can present to the world in placing together the noble traditions which are ours!"

The bearer of this message was M. Guerin Des Jardins, who represented the Boy Scouts of France at the recent National Conference of Scout Executives at Blue Ridge, N. C. Mr. Des Jardins is known throughout the length and breadth of his own country for his work for the welfare of boys. He is also prominent for his efforts to unify scouting in France and he is the first man to be honored jointly by the three French scout movements for the mission of representing the whole scout body. The Italian and Belgian organizations have decorated him with their highest award, and in England he has been honored by receiving from Sir Robert Baden-Powell, father of the scout movement, the silver Wolf cup.

M. Des Jardins brought warm and cordial expressions of the appreciation of the French scouts for their American brothers. He said: "The French boy and the American boy may differ as far as natural surroundings go, but at heart they are alike—happy and gay and lovable. The same splendid qualities to be developed and the same dangers to be avoided." When M. Des Jardins was complimented on his study of boy psychology, he credited our American books on the subject as the basis of his work. "I read these works and then I observe our own boys to see how they react under the same conditions as are described in your books. The experiment proves the boy is essentially the same everywhere. We, too, find the 'gang spirit' harmful, but thanks to our scouting, boys are being now formed into useful, energetic troops. Once in passing through a small town I had not visited for some time, and noticing the absence of idle, loafing boys, I said to a little fellow nearby: 'Where are all the tough kids that used to be around here?' 'We ain't got any tough kids any more,' said the lad, 'there's a boy scout troop here now.'"

At the conference M. Des Jardins showed an exhibit of the French scouts' handicraft, and their version of the life and work of the American Indian. "Our boys," said he, "are perhaps more enthusiastic about the Indians than the American boys themselves. J. Fennimore Cooper is eagerly read everywhere by the French boy. Our lads are constantly trying to imitate the endurance, courage and self-control of the Red Man. Sometimes they will set a goal in self-restraint by not speaking for a certain length of time. That's just to be like the Indian, who is a man of few words. When a French scout hurts himself, he tries to bear the pain bravely, without letting one know how much it hurts. That, too, is an effort to endure bravely just as the Indians did. Indeed, one of the official scout tests in France is called 'the Indian test,' in which the boys are required, for instance, to remain motionless for a certain length of time, just as the Red Man would have done in the forests of old when studying the ways of the birds and timid animals of the woods. Other features of the test bring out the great virtues of these first Americans. In fact, 'Visage Pale,' which in English is 'Pale Face,' is a sturdy scout's term of reproach for an unscoutlike comrade."

M. Des Jardins says that the French boys are especially fond of the artistic features connected with scouting. At the French camps the boys compete in arranging floral decorations of their own design on the tables in the mess hall or outside of their camps. They like to beautify the interior of their camps, too, with decorations which they make themselves. This summer at M. Des Jardins' camp a daily page was offered to the boy who arranged the most beautiful decoration in the mess hall. So interested were these French lads in this artistic work that they would give up part of their play time to designing attractive centerpieces for the mess hall in small stones, wild flowers and moss. Often such slogans of appreciation as "Vive l'Amerique"—Long live America, "Vive les Boy Scouts d'Amerique"—Long live the Boy Scouts of America, would appear written in small white stones.

Throughout his stay in this country, M. Des Jardins will be the guest of the American Committee for Devastated France.

SCOUTS RUN EXCITING RACE

A miniature automobile race by boy scouts for the "McGinty Cup" from Fargo, N. D., to San Francisco, Calif., was the unique form of competition used by boy scout troops of Fargo in an endeavor to increase troop efficiency, membership, and public interest in the movement. In the window of a local business concern a miniature track was laid. The race lasted one month, and the place of the cars on the road was determined by points gained in the contest.
